

CALLING female entrepreneurs!

Join our intensive three-day workshop programme for female-led businesses looking for growth.

The biggest challenge for smaller enterprises is growth; and growth today means finding international markets, suppliers and partners.

Women may face particular challenges in developing their business. We want to support and inspire women to build their enterprises, particularly into international markets.

Kingston University is running a series of workshops to help women-led businesses. Our team of experts will provide insight into the challenges of business development. You will have a chance to meet other entrepreneurs facing similar challenges, and build a supportive network for yourself.

Get involved. It's time to grow.

Featuring:

- Insight into the key challenges of international business development
- Information about legal and regulatory issues
- Finding the customer and tailoring activities to suit them
- Partnerships and suppliers – sharing the experience
- Sources of help and support at home and abroad
- An overseas perspective

Sessions will include expert guest speakers, our highly qualified entrepreneurship support staff, the shared experience of practitioners, and peer support from other business owners facing similar challenges. The objective is to enable you to tackle your business development opportunities with confidence.
